In Rome there are many late renaissance buildings with ornamental bees on them. The bees were said to have flown from Florence to Rome to feed on the nectar of the Church and were the insignia of the great patrons, the Barberini family. Today, alas, our bees are plastic and flew from China to Philadelphia.

This artwork was made possible by the Sachs Program for Arts Innovation and has been conceived and constructed by Richard Weller, Tone Chu, James Billingsley, Karl Wellman and Joe Seeger of the Weitzman School of Design.
